The Ceramics Collection

That's just how

Art WORKS

The inspiration behind designer Kristin Scott's process in creating the ceramics collection

My Design Process is pretty involved. I use traditional drawing and painting methods and digital and Photoshop manipulation techniques. I will start with a shape for a ceramic box, teacup, or tray and then spend a lot of time pouring over my reference materials and design inspiration. I build mood boards and color reference sheets to ensure that there is a color story across the collection. I talk with my partner about the designs, how they are progressing, and what changes or critiques in the design process may need to be done. The art gets passed back and forth, sometimes for months, with little tweaks here and there until we are certain the piece has met its potential. Sometimes, the process is really fast, and we can create a piece in just a few hours.

Some pieces take months and months of back and forth, but that's just how art works. Sometimes, an idea presents itself fully formed; sometimes, you must coax it out into the open. That is the enjoyable part of the process: seeing the art form itself and having a life unto itself. Once they are complete and they tell the story I have in my mind's eye, we will move forward with production. SFG
